

How do I know what equipment goes back to Comcast?

If you only have basic cable television as provided in your WBF dues (i.e. no upgraded channels, no hi-def), the Comcast equipment is a small cable box and a remote control.

Note: Labels are usually “Comcast” or “Xfinity”.

How do I know what equipment goes back to Comcast?

1. Your monthly billing statement shows what additional items you have opted for from Comcast. For example, if you have Hi-Def channels, the bill may say “HD Technology Fee” or “HD Converter” for $9.95 each. Also, “Additional outlet (includes HD Technology Fee” would mean you have a second cable box for HD. These cable boxes and remotes must be returned to Comcast.
2. If you have Comcast DVR video recording service, that is also a Comcast cable box and must be returned.

Personal DVD player does not go back to Comcast.

How do I know what equipment goes back to Comcast?

If you get internet from Comcast, you will have a cable modem, and (wireless) router. Either you purchased those, and they are yours to keep. Or, if they are Comcast-owned, it will show that on your bill, and these must be returned.

The devices below belong to the owner and do not go back to Comcast.

How do I know what equipment goes back to Comcast?

If you have not returned Comcast's equipment when Summit arrives to do your new individual installation, they will box all of the Comcast equipment up for you; and you simply take that whole box to Comcast. Summit can identify some Comcast equipment, but they will need your Comcast bill to make sure.

 All of Comcast's equipment must be returned to them. *****
It is recommended that you take your Comcast bill with you for proper processing.
